67. The dialogue commission gives thanks to God that certain doctrinal convergences on some key issues begin to be discernible in our work already. This encourages us to work for no less than visible unity — not a limping compromise achieved by paring away divergences, but nothing less than common witness to the one apostolic faith.

68. The dialogue between Disciples of Christ and the Roman Catholic Church has begun and already must live in the logic of what is happening. It demands that we begin now, as far as possible, to proclaim together the same Lord Jesus Christ, giving common witness to 'the hope that is in us' (I Pet. 2:13). It demands, even now, that we enter to the fullest extent possible into that process of mutual recognition which is ultimately a worshipful acknowledgement of the one Lord in whom we are baptized, whose gifts we enjoy, to whose service we are called.
